Strong partners

Lajes gears up for UCI

Staff Sgt. Beverly Isik

Public affairs

Team Lajes will be under the microscope Monday-Thursday when a team of inspectors conducts a Unit Compliance Inspection.

Lajes' last inspection of this caliber was a Quality Air Force Assessment in 1997.

"The upcoming UCI will see how well we follow rules derived from laws, policies and directives," said Lt. Col. Andrew Knapp, wing inspector general.

A 17-person team from U.S. Joint Forces Command will inspect U.S. Forces Azores activities, while a 44-member team from Air Combat Command will inspect 65th Air Base Wing organizations.

"We run a tight ship here at Lajes every day," said Col. Bill Percival, 65th ABW and USFORAZ commander. "I'm certain we'll show the inspectors why Team Lajes members are truly people at their best."

The UCI team will provide the out-brief to wing leaders, March 30, before the post-UCI party in the Air Base 4 South Hangar. The party, open to all Team Lajes members, is set for 2-4 p.m.

"There will be plenty of free food and drinks for everyone -- hamburgers, hot dogs and the works," the colonel said. "I hope everyone will come out and enjoy."

A shuttle will run from the commissary from 1-2 p.m., and from 4-5 p.m. There's some parking at the AB4 North Hangar.

What's inside?

Some Lajes entrepreneurs open their doors to the community. See Pages 4-5 to see what kinds of services they offer.

Some AB4 troops to use Chace Fitness Center

Col. Bill Percival
Commander

When you're working out at the Chace Fitness Center, you might notice a few Portuguese military troops alongside you.

In the past, local nationals were not allowed access into the fitness center during American hours. However, Air Base 4 officials recently asked that we allow their search and rescue team access.

This was a service we were more than happy to provide. Search and rescue is a very demanding job -- one that requires the people to maintain the highest level of physical fitness.

The wing doesn't have a search and rescue team, so Air Base 4 stands ready and willing to come to our aid, should the need ever arise. They also provide service throughout the entire Azores region.

One of our most important missions here at Lajes is to strengthen the relationship between the American and Portuguese communities. This can only be achieved through a daily commitment of supporting each other in the community and in maintaining mission readiness.

Next time you see one of the team members at the fitness center, show them our wonderful Lajes hospitality. Give them a much deserved pat on the back. They'll appreciate knowing that we appreciate what they do.

Uniform modifications, tests closer to completion

WASHINGTON — From flight suits to mini badges, people at the Air Force Clothing Division and Institute of Heraldry are bringing initiatives approved by the 95th uniform board closer to military clothing sales store shelves.

Items being worked by the Air Force Clothing Division include the following:

— Initial fit tests for an athletic-cut service dress uniform have been completed. Test data is being compiled, and wear testing is scheduled to begin in the third quarter of fiscal 2001.

— New, lighter weight acrylic pullover sweater prototypes were forwarded to the Air Force uniform office in the second quarter of fiscal 2001 and are currently being worn in the Pentagon.

— Initial fit testing for resizing the women's tuck-in shirt was conducted at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio. Wear testing should begin in the fourth quarter of fiscal 2001.

— The Air Force Clothing Division is researching uniform fabric options for the service dress uniform, including the current polyester fabric, for wear by Air Force members who have sensitivities to the wool in current uniforms.

— The Institute of Heraldry is working with civilian contractors to get the new mid-sized functional badges on the shelves. These badges will replace the mini badge that the uniform board determined was too small and difficult to see.

Each of the 67 Air Force specialty codes requires three skill-level badges (basic, master and senior) for a total of 201 badges, said Master Sgt. Ruth Nischwitz, superintendent of the Air Force uniform board office.

"The first three career fields -- personnel, parachutist and space missile badges -- have been approved and certified by the Institute of Heraldry," she said.

As contractors complete each set, they are made available to Army and Air Force Exchange Service Military Clothing Sales Stores for order; people should check with their local store for availability, she said.

"We have a projected completion date for the entire collection of not later than December 2001," Nischwitz said. "Based on that, phase out of the mini badges is anticipated to be in the spring of 2002."

The anticipated changes to the Air Force uniform reflect a comprehensive and detailed process -- spanning inputs from designers, pattern makers, and research and development phases through the fit and wear test, she said.

"Basically, it's like having clothes tailor made -- except these clothes have to fit almost 400,000 people and be durable enough to withstand the frequent wear and tear we put our uniforms through," Nischwitz said.

The Air Force is midway through the yearlong testing of two modified flight suits specifically designed for women, said Nischwitz. The suits, which feature either a standard length or an extended length zipper, are being studied for two reasons.

The first addresses female aircrew concerns about the fit of the men's suits causing discomfort and, on some, an unprofessional appearance, Nischwitz said. The extended zipper suit, developed by the Navy, is also being tested for suitability of use with bladder-relief devices. Both suits are made in female proportions.

The wear test of these flight suits will be finished in July, with recommendations on whether to adopt one or both suits due in October, she said.

Once the uniform is approved by the chief of staff, production will begin and wearers should see the flight suits stocked by the end of 2002.

It's sew easy

Effective May 1, Lajes Air Combat Command troops must wear the subdued ACC patch on the right breast pocket of the battle dress uniform. Tenant units should wear the appropriate major command or equivalent subdued patch, in accordance with their MAJCOM directions. Members assigned to units with an authorized unit patch must wear it on the left breast pocket unless they're authorized to wear a specialty badge. Those in units not authorized a unit patch must wear the wing subdued patch. Tenant units should follow MAJCOM directives.

Home business owners bring variety to Lajes

Whether it's a little change of menu to spice things up or you wake up and find that your hair grew a 1/2 inch while you were sleeping and you can't do a thing with it, a group of aspiring entrepreneurs here at Lajes have just the thing.

Home businesses at Lajes provide everything from Italian, Korean and Thai take-out lunches to custom-made clothes, from studio photography to manicures.

The home business concept has double benefits. Not only does it offer community members alternatives in where they shop and eat, it also gives the business owner a chance to find work in an environment where, because of a long-standing agreement between the United States and Portugal, most civilian jobs are filled by local nationals.

Khua Thai owner Tuy Mullard said she is not really in the business for the money. "The money is OK -- it helps out," she said. "But I opened my restaurant because I want to be busy and pass the time."

They may not be getting rich, but some say the pay isn't too shabby, considering the fringe benefits -- they make their own hours, they're doing a job they enjoy and they don't have to fight morning traffic at the Beira Mar Gate.

"Business is going really great. I went from selling 60 meals the first month to 60 meals just last week," said Kim Springer, owner of Pasta and More. "But even if I only made $100 a month, I don't really care. I like to cook and I feel good knowing I make others happy. I give from the heart and don't take shortcuts."

Home business owners advertise with fliers and menus in the post office, but word of mouth goes a long way -- especially in this small community here in the middle of the Atlantic.

"Everyone comes back, and they tell their coworkers and friends," Springer said.

There's a lot more than just takeout lunches. Several cake decorating and pastry chefs are also open for business. But, customers need to place their orders in advance. As one owner puts it, cakes are "time consuming, and you just can't hurry one."

"I sell at least one or two cheesecakes each week," said Renee Childs, owner of Cheesecakes by Renee. "A lot of men buy them for their wives' birthdays. I sell more of the plain cheesecake with cherries, but people who have tried my turtle cheesecake and lemon cheesecake rave over them."

All Food services must have a certificate from military public health.

The program is managed by the housing office, which is the first stop for potential business owners. To find out how to get started, call housing at 2-3507.

(Right) Pasta and More owner, Kim Springer, prepares cheese tortellini and sun-dried tomato and garlic pesto sauce from her home in Beira Mar Housing. Pasta and More features a regular menu and a weekly special that's not on the menu.
